In early December 2017, dedicated 'Bus Only' lane markings will be installed as part of the $160 million O-Bahn City Access Project.

In September 2016, bus lane regulation changes came into effect for public transport buses, allowing for the installation of 'Bus Only' lane markings along the road network. As part of the O-Bahn City Access Project these lanes will be implemented between the end of the busway at Gilberton and the cross-city priority (bus) lanes on Grenfell Street.

Dedicated 'Bus Only' lanes start with a red painted outline and a red and white 'Bus Only' message, repeated every 200 metres. Between these points a bus only lane will be shown as a continuous red line along the white lane line marking.

These dedicated 'Bus Only' lane markings will help to reinforce the intended use of the bus lanes installed along Hackney Road as part of the O-Bahn City Access Project. Once completed the Project will improve travel times and reliability for users of the O-Bahn service between the end of the busway at Gilberton and Grenfell Street, and reduce traffic congestion and delays, particularly on the Inner Ring Route.

Once additional line marking has been installed, motorists (except for public transport buses) must not:

- stop a vehicle in a 'Bus Only' lane
- drive in a 'Bus Only' lane, except when avoiding an obstruction.

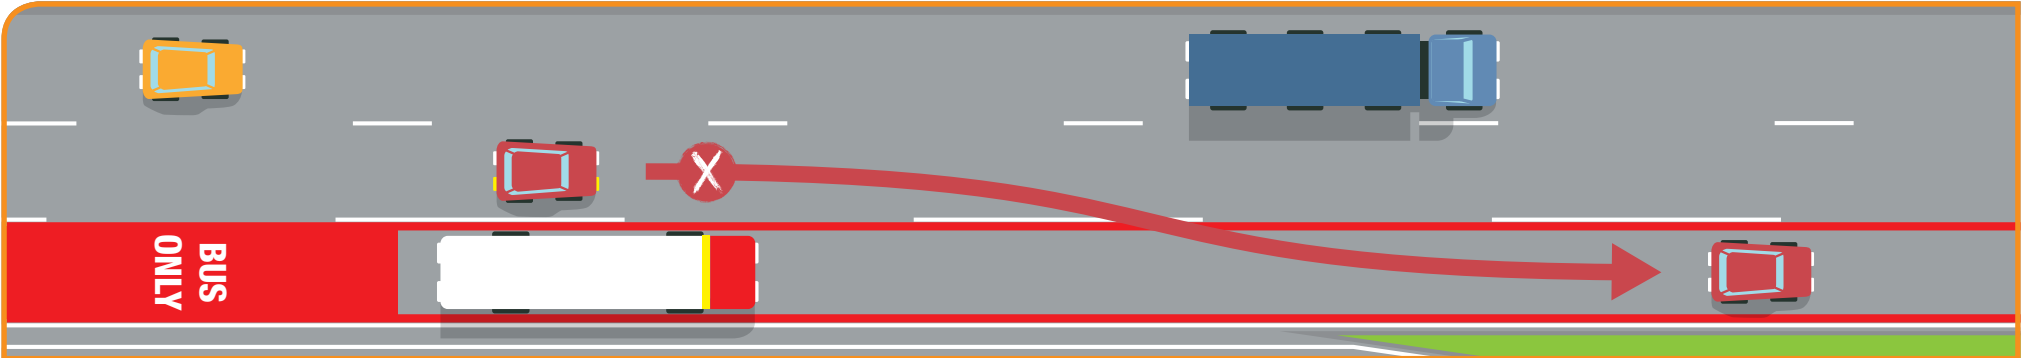

These rules do not apply to emergency vehicles in an emergency situation.

Refer to the diagrams over page for further information relating to the 'Bus Only' Lanes.

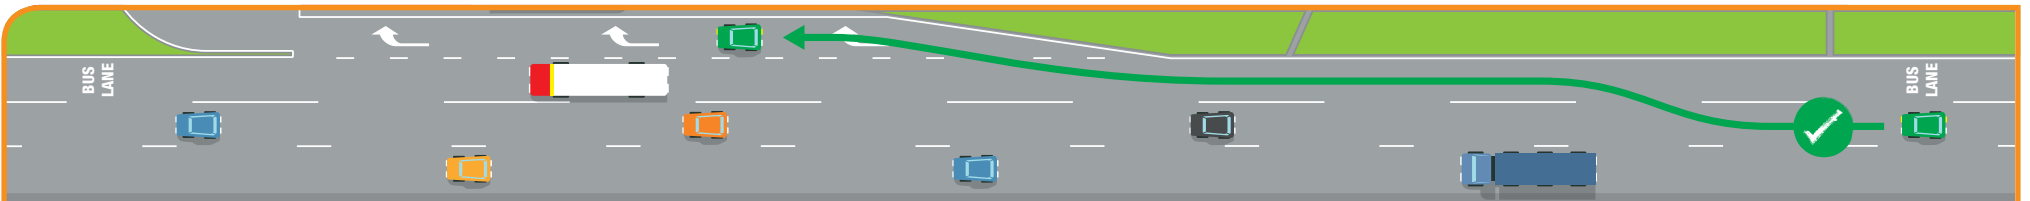

Motorists are advised that a maximum penalty of $2500 applies for driving in a red 'Bus Only' lane. This fine does not apply when travelling for up to 100 metres in the sections marked with the 'Bus Lane' message and white lines only.
